A DAY FOR THE CHILD

MOTHERS have a day. Fathers have a day. Hearts have one—(St. Valentine's Day). Trees have one—(Arbor Day). So, of course, children had to have one. To be sure, children have always claimed every holiday—especially Christmas and the Fourth of July—as their own. But one of the merriest days of the year is theirs, too. On the the Fourth of July—as their own.
But one of the merriest days of the year is theirs, too. On the first of May, when the world is dressed in its pink and green party dress, we celebrate Child Health Day.

In the belief that the health of the child is the strength of the child is the strength of the nation, Child Health Day was founded ten years ago by the American Child Health Association. On that day, with Maypoles and picnics and singing contests, we commemorate the fact that there are so many healthy American children, and consider plans to widen the never-ceasing work of giving more children a chance to be healthy and happy.

Give your eyes a vacation

golf, you sun bathe and you read. Many people do more reading in the summer than during the rest It's fun to read;-make it healthy too. Reading is relaxing only when the eyes are not being strained. Reading is fatiguing and enervating when the light is inadequate. Give your eyes, and your family's eyes a real vacation this summer. Make certain that the seeing conditions in your summer home are safe. A remarkable device called the sight meter enables you to test the light in your summer home quickly. It measures light scientifically, accurately and records whether there is sufficient light for reading, needlework and other seeing tasks. Your eyes serve you every day of the year. Do not put an extra strain on them during the vacation period. Make sure that your summer home, also your office and factory, are safe for seeing.
